The Russian Expedition's Sydney Visit in 1820 and some Forgotten Blue Mountains Names

Vol. 143, p.1-28, 2010

David F. Branagan

I am grateful to Robin Walsh, Honorary Associate, School of Modern History, Macquarie University, who visited St. Petersburg in 2005, for pointing out (2nd April, 2014) several errors and omissions in the paper named above.

Page 7, footnote 15. 'The driver is not identified' is incorrect. He was, in fact, John Fuller, rewarded by Governor Macquarie for his assistance by payment of £11 from the Police Fund, as noted in the Sydney Gazette, 29 July 1820, p. 2.

P. 21, footnote 21. It is suggested that Campbell's Cataract [presently named Wentworth Falls] 'was named by Macquarie for his Secretary John Thomas Campbell (c. 1770-1830), brother of his second wife Elizabeth' (this error was taken from a reference in Hugh Speirs, p. 40, referenced in the paper).

However this Campbell was NOT related to Elizabeth Macquarie, but was from Northern Ireland, and recruited by Macquarie at Cape Town when Macquarie was en route to Sydney (Australian Dictionary of Biography, vol. 1).

I also note that on Page 1, column 1: The ships, under the command of Mikhail Nikolaevich Vasiliev, were NOT 'the northern party of the exploring expedition led by Admiral Bellingshausen', but an independent expedition.
